Advice Letter to Romeo

Dear Romeo,

I have read your previously written letter to me, and I have some advice for you. There are many outcomes of this marriage. One is that everything could go as planned and you live happily ever after. Another is that because you rushed into this, your marriage won't last for more than a few weeks. Lastly, in the worst case scenario, your father-in-law would try to kill you. But don't worry, I can help if you listen to me.

In the best case scenario, you and Juliet would happily ever after and everyone would get along. Not if you keep doing as you are. We both know that isn't going to happen. So if you listen to my advice and you'll be just fine. I think that you two need to slow just a bit. You hardly even know her. You just need to take a few months of hanging out, going to balls, and spending time together. I know that you think you're in love, but believe me, your just thinking that.

Another thing you should do is tell your family, and Juliet do the same. Get to know her family. If this happens, the fighting and violence may stop, since they're daughter/son are married to each other. So do everything you can to get them to see your view of things.

Worst case scenario: You and Juliet get married behind your parents and friends backs, and everyone hates you and her family tries to kill you. If you follow my advice and not rush into this, then this won't happen. Who knows? Maybe this will work out between your family and her family, and everyone will live happily and in peace.

If you have any concerns or problems, remember that I'm here for you.
